

Hound.com Specializes Job Searches Even More by Adding Company Search Feature

August 14, 2007

Pasadena, CA—Hound.com has improved its search abilities yet again by adding a company search feature in addition to its keyword and location search options.

"This is a very useful tool that I think job seekers are going to use again and again throughout their job searches," said Hound.com CEO Harrison Barnes. "And this is just the beginning. We're working to attain the largest selection of companies and jobs in the world."

Job seekers know what they want, and with this feature, they can narrow their results by only searching for jobs at the companies they want to work for. In addition, users can search company results by date, so they are guaranteed to find the most current jobs for specific companies.

Hound.com's company search feature can bring up pages and pages of the most current jobs at a plethora of in-demand companies in a variety of industries. The usual chore of sifting through jobs to find target companies is now obsolete with this feature.

"Everyone likes to have options; that's a fact, and this feature allows job seekers the capacity to pick and choose from thousands of employers. Now, that's taking control of your job search," said Barnes.
